

AI Customer Support Research Test Document

AI agents can potentially automate routine customer support tasks, such as answering frequently asked questions and assisting with basic order-related requests.

Human support agents may still be required for complex, sensitive, or unusual customer situations.

Important evaluation factors include response time, resolution rate, customer satisfaction, operational cost, accuracy, privacy, and escalation performance.